They have the contracts for the iron framework of nearly all the big buildings now in course of construction in the city. For this class of work the heaviest and most expensive machinery is required, and the plant was equipped with the best of modern applances. Necessarily there will be a considerable delay on many buildings among which are the new Mutual Life and Abbry's Theatre.

Most of the material had been made, but it could not be ascertained this morning whether it was damaged to an extent rendering it unfit for use. Some of the lighter pieces were warped by the heat, but this, according to Supt. Reed, can be remedied and the material used.

How the fire originated and just where is a matter of conjecture. There were six watchmen in and around the buildings, and none of the finishing shop secured to bize up at once, and the structure which was only one story high, with wooden framework and corrugated iron sidings, was ablaze before the first alsum was turned in.

The inquiry related to the alleged violations of the contract labor law, and the failure to prosecute offenders under the law by the proper officers of New York, New Jersey and Philadelphia.

John Conkling, an inspector at Ellis Island, and H. Maitland Kersey, agent of the White Star line, were the first witnesses called.

Mr. Kersey described the operation of the new law requiring the steamship companies to arrange their immigrants in blocks of thirty, and objected to it as entailing great additional work upon the employees of the steamship lines and confusing the immigrants.

Inspector Conkling said that he believed the contract labor law was constantly violated, and said that contractors here so instructed the immigrants that they found no difficulty in swearing themselves in.
